- Work in partnership
- Change to improve

Introduction Bernard Hogan-Howe, Assistant Commissioner, Human Resources

I am pleased to present the Human Resources Business and Performance Plan for 2004/05. This aims to explain how HR supports the MPS in achieving the vision of making London the safest major city in the world.

During 2004/05, HR will be working towards five strategic objectives, some of which are new and some of which continue existing work:

- 1. Enhance the representation of the diverse groups of London within the extended police family of the MPS (continued from 2003/04 objective).
- 2. Develop a professional and effective workforce with the required numbers and skills to support the delivery of operational priorities (continued from 2003/04 objective).
- 3. Embed improved quality in the activity undertaken within the HR Directorate and corporate HR function (takes in work from 2003/04 objectives regarding HR infrastructure and dynamic HR function).
- 4. Enhance organisational flexibility and effectiveness by supporting the MPS with the management of major change programmes (new objective),
- 5. Build a culture of safe and healthy working to maximise front line policing strength (continued from 2003/04 objective).

Diversity

Diversity was a key theme of 2003/04. In line with our desire to develop a workforce that is representative of the diverse London community we serve, the MPS recruited unprecedented numbers of police officers who are female and/or from a minority ethnic background. These successes in recruitment underpinned the achievement of challenging overall strength targets for these groups of police officers. Female and minority ethnic representation among Police Community Support Officers also remain extremely healthy.

A further highlight of the year was the establishment of the new Career Management and Retention Unit, to support the retention and progression of MPS staff, in particular, to address the needs of female and minority ethnic personnel.

HR has also made a full contribution to the work of the independent MPA-sponsored Morris Inquiry. I look forward to receiving the findings of the Inquiry, which will be incorporated into HR's plans and activities at the earliest opportunity.

Diversity will continue to have a high profile during 2004/05. We have increased our level of ambition with respect to the representative nature of the workforce. We look forward to working with key partners such as the Development and Organisational Improvement Team, the trade unions and the staff support associations to further the progression and retention of the whole range of under-represented groups, as well as improving their experience in the workplace. October 2004 will see the extension of the provisions of the Disability Discrimination Act to police officers. HR will rise to the challenge by supporting the MPS to ensure the skills and experience of those on restricted and recuperative duties are fully utilised.

Developing a professional and effective workforce

During 2003/04 the MPS recruited and trained over 3,200 police officers, and January 2004 saw police officer strength top 30,000 for the first time in the history of the MPS. At the same time, a backlog of over 6,000 applications was cleared and the Home Office's National Recruitment Standards were introduced. This will ensure the MPS adopts best practice in recruit selection.

Further achievements included the establishment of a new unit to co-ordinate training and development opportunities for police staff, particularly in the areas of management and leadership. Progress on police reform included the introduction of Competence Related Threshold Payments to reward experienced officers for good performance, Special Priority

Payments to support the retention of experienced officers in key front line roles, and bonus payments to recognise exceptional performance.

The process for Professional Development Reviews was reviewed, and the completion rate for the year was 87% - a significant improvement on previous years. 2004/05 will see further improvements to PDRs, better aligning the process with organisational, business group and operational command unit objectives.

Other key initiatives planned for 2004/05 include introducing a shorter, modular approach to Driver Training to achieve a streamlined process that will increase output and further minimise resources. The introduction of e-learning approaches on the foundation training course for new police officer recruits will also take place.

We plan to introduce new in-force assessment processes for promoting sergeants and inspectors, and to strengthen arrangements for overseeing the probationary period for new sergeants. A career development strategy for senior police officers will be introduced. This will include the establishment of a process for officers to apply to the new-style Police National Assessment Centre, and the creation of a development programme for commanders of borough and other operational command units. The development of career pathways for police officers and police staff will support progression, and help address difficulties experienced by female and minority ethnic staff and officers.

2004/05 will also see HR moving on the medium term pay strategy for police staff, introducing an accelerated development scheme for police staff, and delivering the first year of the corporate civilianisation programme, freeing up more police officers for deployment in operational roles.

Improving Quality

In 2003/04, HR progressed the improvement of quality through two strategic objectives. The first related to developing the HR infrastructure, and the second to developing a dynamic HR function.

One of the highlights of the year was the completion of the rollout of MetHR (the new improved HR system), which has improved access to information about the workforce, adding value to the way the MPS uses its resources and supporting business processes such as recruitment, selection, promotion, deployment and training and development. Last year also saw the development of the workforce planning and predictive modelling tool and the creation of a new deployment plan. This has ensured that police strength on boroughs is close to target and that boroughs are not stripped of experienced police officers. At all times this was balanced with the competing needs of specialist units such as murder, child protection, counter-terrorism and traffic.

In order to ensure the HR Directorate responds effectively to the operational needs of the MPS, HR continued to strengthen its customer focus, for example through the live forum on the intranet, account managers, customer surveys, and monthly meetings with all local HR managers.

The momentum will be maintained in 2004/05 as we conduct a fundamental review of the way HR services are provided to the whole of the MPS. Other plans include further developing MetHR as a strategic business tool, completing the review of all HR policies and introducing notional training contracts to increase the return on investment in training.

Supporting organisational change

The MPS is a dynamic, high performance and growing organisation, and as such has in hand a number of high profile programmes of major organisational change. As a service organisation, the people component of change is critical to successful delivery. To this end, we have created a new objective to make HR's contributions to these changes more transparent. The HR Directorate will be providing strategic HR support to:

The introduction of C3i

- The transfer of responsibility for The Royal Parks Police
- The introduction of Metcall, the new corporate command and control system
- The Modernising Operations project
- The transfer of motorway control rooms to The Highways Agency
- The re-letting of the support services contracts for property services, technology and communications, pay and pensions and transport.

HR will also be leading the implementation within the MPS of the Home Office's Probationer Training Modernisation Programme. This will bring a more modern, flexible, modular approach to the way new police recruits are trained and will bring training closer to the work place. Recruits will assimilate into policing culture more quickly by increasing their exposure to borough policing earlier in their career as a police officer, thus ultimately delivering higher quality new constables to operational policing units.

Developing a safe and healthy workforce

Throughout 2003/04 the level of sickness absence among police officers continued to decrease, from an average of 9.7 days per officer per year, to an average of 8.5 days. Sickness absence among traffic wardens has also fallen by more than a quarter. These impressive achievements have been supported by a continuing programme of four innovative health promotion campaigns: healthy eating, well-being at work, physical fitness and cancer awareness. The campaigns are delivered to each borough and operational command unit by means of specially designed vehicles and dedicated staff. They have proved very popular and successful. The Spend to Save scheme, first introduced in April 2001, has continued to support achievement in this area. The scheme has funded medical operations for 87 individuals, making available an additional £1.6 million worth of police officer and police staff time for operational activity. There has been further significant progress towards the development of a safe and healthy workforce. This included the introduction of a new health and safety policy and the introduction of an enhanced advisory service to support real improvements in the management of health and safety in the workplace. It is also pleasing that the downward trend in medical retirements has continued apace, retaining valuable skills within the organisation. This has been complemented by the introduction of a new recuperative and restricted duties policy to assist individuals back to work and increase the availability for duty of officers and staff.

Whilst maintaining the lower levels of police officer sickness absence, the focus for 2004/05 will be to similarly reduce sickness absence among police staff. Although the MPS compares well against other forces, the growing importance of police staff in providing and directly supporting front line services to the public makes this an area for close attention. HR will undertake initiatives to support line managers in their efforts to reduce sickness absence, and continue the emphasis on positive health promotion work. This will be combined with the more effective management of individuals on restricted and recuperative duties. Health and safety also continues to be a high priority area for the MPS, and we will build on last year's achievements by working with the MPA to monitor compliance, improving the quality of management of health and safety issues within the MPS, and implementing a rolling programme of risk assessments.

The People Strategy

2004/05 is the final year of the MPS' current People Strategy, and although much of the work has been completed, some final items of work feature in this year's plan, as described above.

Responding to change

Within HR, we are very much aware that policing is subject to continual change, and we seek to respond dynamically to these demands in order to support the MPS to provide the best possible service to the communities of London. It is therefore likely that this Business and Performance Plan will evolve throughout the year. For example, HR will need to respond to recommendations made by external inquiries such as the Morris Inquiry and the forthcoming inquiry by the Commission for Racial Equality. As a result of the introduction of the National Intelligence Model and changes to the corporate planning framework, negotiations between HR and operational business groups have not yet been concluded to agree exactly how their requirements of HR might best be met. It is therefore likely that a number of in-year changes to the plan will be necessary to support the delivery of policing plan objectives already agreed with the Police Authority.

At a corporate level, HR will play an active role in the Corporate Strategic Assessment process as it continues to develop. We see this as an important way of ensuring that our work and priorities are fully reflective of the evolving needs of the MPS as a whole. Within the Directorate, the HR Board will continue to and to proactively monitor our progress against our targets and aims, ensuring the work of HR actively supports the delivery of effective operational policing to Londoners.

I look forward to another challenging year of achievement in 2004/05.
